

////// BUTTERFLY HOUSE - SINGAPORE

Client - Private Residence / Completed 2014

One important idea we were expressing was that of unity. It's about two coming together to become one, to express through architecture how our clients, as a couple, are united even though as individuals they are different. To achieve this, another seamless partnership was required between architect and engineer.

A deconstructive approach was adopted to the structural design to go hand in glove with the organic design of the residence. A "structure without grids" was conceived and eventually developed and delivered where the structure seemingly disappears in favour of the quality and experience of space.
